Foreign Exchange is becoming more regular. The leadof drawers of sterling quote 109 for 60 day's bills, which, hewever, is above the market, the chief rate on actual sales being 1084 2 1082. The payment of the one-year certificates puts out of existence a security which, during the Rebellion, was of prent service to the Treasury. There now remains within the control of the Department nothing but the temporary cans, which cannot be too soon reduced. Included in Dem are what is known as Clearing-House certificates, spon which interest can be stopped or materially reduced without forcing them in for payment. These Clearing-House certificates save the trouble and risk of using a arge amount of legal tenders daily, and there is no good on why interest should be allowed upon a scrip indismable to the convenient working of the banks. The sanks have made a handsome profit out of this medium of settlements during the Rebellion, but there is no proprioty in continuing the favor longer.

Neill Bros. & Co. say of the growing cotton crop:

We hear this week very favorable reports of the weather, both by mail and telegraph, from almost all parts of the South. A good deal of cotton has been planted as the rivers fell, and, lake though it be, partial crops may be the result. With the improved weather great progress was being made in clearing the fields of weeds and grass, and a much more cheerful tone prevails among the planters, who now begin to admit that things are not so hopeless as they seemed. The following is from a Georgia correspondent, dated 21st inst..

For the last week the weather in Middle Georgia has been glounded for all crops, and we hear rather favorable accounts from South-Western Georgia, where in most counties the planters have secured good stands. We think under the present weather, clear and cool, the cotton in the sections named will improve greatly. But no one can deny the abundance of grass, which freedmen do not manage as well as they did when layed.

The following is from Texes, June 21:

Trimity Eiver reports still unfavorable—others better, and we hear fewer complaints. Col. M., an old planter, an intellects man, whom I istely met, say he thinks Texas will still peaks more cotton than ever before. He has just come through hem Tennessee and Mississippi, and reports that while in seme places the cotton was poor and grassy, in others, and the majority, the crop was clean and promising.

OUR FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.

MERICAN AND FRENCH DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE

"FOREIGN APPAIRS. DIPLOMATIC DOCUMENTS. 1866.
Paris: Imperial Press: June, 1866."—Such 18 the translapartial answer to that letter, addressed to M. Montholon, dated April 6. The remaining fourteen pages of this pamphlet are filled with ten choice selections from the correspondence of the French Minister of Foreign Affairs with the French Minister Resident at Mexico, of various dates from August 14, 1865, to March 9, 1866. The proper title of this interesting little work would be "Exonasis: An who with all his then professed confidence in the brilliany future of the Mexican Empire, does not appear to have been a large subscriber, now reminds those who were of the settled maxim that risks and profits are proportionate, and that they should have seen on the face of it that an investment promising more than ten per cent interest besides semi-annual chances of winning enormous lottery prizes, was a very hazardous one. The Baron David next brings out from his hidden stores of last year, where he kept such sound financial views of the Mexican loan, expressions of warm affection and high respect for the United States, between whom and France there never can be any collision appone of Mexico; and closes, in his peculiarly logical, consistent way, so consolatory and complimentary to everybody—both Emperors included—that in future Mexico, will belong to the Mexicans, and, therefore, if I understand him, French intervention have been an uncommonly good and glorious thing. The Baron Jerome David's oration appears, by the stenographic report, to have been en dured, for the most part, in solemn silence by the afflicted hearers.

Not so the Emperor's second manifesto on the war, his letter to Drouyn de Lhuys, read in the Corps Legislatif by Minister Rouher last Tuesday. Such of its ambiguous clear passages as seemed pacific were underscored by loud applause from the House; and as its general drift appeared ratherish in that direction, the applause at its close was loud and long. Minister Rouher added a few words to the effect that, in rice of the uterances of this letter and of the actual interesting situation of affairs in respect of the European crisis, Government deprecated any present defect that, in rice of the uterances of this letter and of the actual interesting situation of affairs in respect of the European crisis, Government deprecated any present defect that, in rice of the uterances of this letter and of

and then there arose what we rude Republicans call e row—a roaring, rousing, high uproarious, chaotic row—[without pistols, however, or profanity or gross personalities; the bowie-knife is an unknown element in French legislation.] Jules Favre vainly strove not to open a full debate on the vital question of the day, but, at least, te provoke the house to so much sense of its own dignity at a representative of the French people as that it should not simply gaze at and swallow the administered Imperial letter; let them, at least, intelligently associate themselves with the other branch of the Government, not childishly, slavishly submit, abdicate; venerable Thiers tried, not factiously, but in a spirit of conciliation; Ollivier, milest of third party men; Le Roux, third partyish, but essentially Conservative man; Picard and Pelletan and Glais-Bizoin, frankly Opposition, all tried in their turn to keep whe majority a degree or two this side of self-prostration—and tried in vain. Meanwhile, there was mingled storm of approbation and condemnatory ejaculation pelting down from this side and that, and loud ringing of President Walewski's storm-bell. Nobody, not even the high-placed lieutenant, Jupiter Tonans, getting more than a three minutes' luli for his talk; and so the chaotic row went on for something like an hour, till at last there was fished and formed out of it a queer sort of a shape of a resolution, to the effect that the chosen representatives of the French people should not discuss the interests of France in view of the actual crisis, but leave their management in the exclusive, unquestioned control of the Emperor.

This much, however, has since been extracted from the speaking Minister; from all present appearances of French financial condition and prospects on one side and of possible war contingencies on the other side, Government declares that it has no present need of a loan, and that, if it should have to take active nart in the imminent war, and so need more money, it will call together the Corps L And then there arose what we rude Republicans call e
